Sean Woolsey

Copper/Mixed Media

Sean Woolsey been influenced by his father, who was a stained glass artist and film photographer. Sean leaned as much as he could from him while growing up, and we even shared a studio for several years. Sean grew up skateboarding, building skate ramps, and tearing apart things to see how they were made; he still does that in fact.

Wabi-Sabi, a Japanese philosophy, is also a large influence on my work and life, it recognizes the beauty in imperfect things which bear the imprint of time. Wabi-Sabi is about the minor and the hidden, the tentative and the ephemeral. It finds true beauty in the organic.

Sean's art is episodic and experimental, and largely inspired by the outdoors and his travels. Whether on copper, sheet metal, or canvas, Sean's work is all original and collected worldwide.
